Florida Renewable Energy Producers Association Holds Statewide Renewable Energy Workshops and Rallies

Tallahassee, Fla. -- The Florida Renewable Energy Producers Association announces a series of workshops to be held in every region throughout the state. The workshops will function as renewable energy educational seminars and rallies for progressive renewable energy policy in Florida. They will also be a way for renewable energy entrepreneurs to learn more about renewable financing opportunities, state and federal policies and energy business opportunities in Florida.

"Moving forward, the renewable energy business community will indeed be fully engaged in Florida policy discussions and will be paying close attention to how our political leaders support the renewable energy industry," says Michael Dobson, FREPA President.

As previously announced, FREPA held its first of a series of meetings in Sarasota on May 13, and the next will be held in Ft. Lauderdale on July 10, with a subsequent meeting in Tallahassee on July 14, and Orlando on July 21, 2009. Others will be planned for Northwest and Northeast Florida.

FREPA is the voice of renewable energy in Florida and its members range from wind energy developers, biomass developers, ethanol and biodiesel producers, solar developers, clean-tech manufacturers, law firms, engineering firms and other auxiliary businesses.
